It's All About You

When designing a home, people tend to start with their public spaces, such as the kitchen, foyer, family room. The master bedroom, bath and closet are often last on the list. The rationale is that the public spaces are the ones most people will see and therefore they are the most important. If 2020 has taught us anything, it is to look after ourselves and our need for a perfect sanctuary. The master suite is YOUR space. It is where you go for relaxation. It is where you can be you and not be parent, host, teacher, Zoom participant, handyman, dish washer, laundry master or anything else your friends and family need.

When a space is designed that you can call your own, we can really sort through what YOU want. The color is about you, not some random 'color of the year'. The texture is about you and how you relax, the view is yours, the bathtub is jetted, sculptural or non-existent because that is what you need and want. All of the details of the master space are only about you and your partner. Freedom! Once you have exercised this freedom in your private spaces, you are more likely going to insert your need of function and aesthetic in the rest of your home. This focus helps clear the clutter of HGTV and trends, and allows you to focus on the best parts of your family expression and life goals.

The number one thing we hear from prospective clients is that all of our work looks completely customized from project to project. This is because we work to bring out our client's personalities in the design, not our own. Some are quirky, some are contemporary and yet others are traditional in their design. Many have pets that need to be accommodated and all of them are as individual as their DNA. We celebrate those differences and work to find ways to bring that DNA into each design.

The number one thing we hear from clients is, "This is me!" ■
